

A Case Study of an Art Therapy Bereavement Group with Adjudicated Adolescents
Michelle Ann DasFaias
1997

Abstract

The adolescents that are depicted in this paper are individuals that have grown up in an environment that has subjected them to death at a young age. Most have learned to accept it, move on, and deny grief. There is a review of the literature on the unique circumstances of adolescents dealing with bereavement. I will then chronicle the art therapy bereavement group that I co-facilitated in a facility for adjudicated adolescents.